

Twitter Thread by yudhika

yudhika

@Satyamev1310

Placing very strong points about some people, without naming those "celebrities". Please ponder upon these.

Several of our Sanatanis follow such people and these "celebrities" time and now hurt our religious feelings, and demean our culture in several ways.

What those people who delight in running down the Hindu culture forget is that Sanatan Dharma and our culture at large have been very self critical.

As a result of this self-critical attitude, several bright sparks rebelled against particular aspects of Hinduism and started their own religions, the Buddha, Mahavira, Basweshwar, and so on.

The beauty of Sanatan Dharma is that it established a friendly relationship with the followers of these religions and treated the progenitors of these new faiths as their own prophets.

We know of several Hindu households in which image of the Buddha is displayed with other Hindu deities in their puja rooms. We have worshiped them all without any discrimination.

When one says 'celebrities', one doesn't necessarily mean Bollywood people. It basically means all those people who live their life in a 'celebrity' style.

Are we going allow these people to demean our culture/Gods/rituals etc just because we followed them once?

Are we going to be so tolerant that we give excuses for all those who insult our Gods and portray them in a particular way?

They exploit our faiths by building huge idols and supporting our weak nerves.

Lets not be 'Dhritrashtra'. My humble request to all. ■■■■■