@lalitha_jr @wataboutery you may like this :- @PrashantKishor - just do a little comparative look into his stand on West Bengal and TN:

- he began WB in all earnest and assured that it's Didi all the way back to power;
- he modified this by stating BJP will get less

less than double digits , which he again modified , that he will quit politics if BJP manages to obtain ■,and, last week he still maintained this stance, but privately he's supposed to have admitted that it's difficult for Didi , including Nandigram(here I think he may be wrong)

I'm not willing to accept the twitter tamasha of the supposed club ■ meeting ,he's not that stupid. Now let's look at TN:-

- in all earnest, he began well..his starting error was his monumental ego in undermining Sunil;
- the campaign was well planned , but the execution was haywire as the man who carried the message was a dud , MKS is nowhere when it comes to presentation skills,& most elections are narratives; even a well planned narrative can become s bomb and here MKS made a series of explosions and poor PK was diffusing the bombs ,rather than

change strategy;

- his second fault was to ignore the old timers in DMK - the truth is even MK never made that mistake ; check history and you'll agree. Added to this was his lieutenants abuse of power and this alienated the cadre.
- now look at his narratives here in TN too

It's not much different; worse was he knew the game was up by the time MKS met him , post polling , and the indifference was visible , look at that photo once again;

- in addition, PK assumed that he was aware of the statretgy of BJP and if you look at that ,with a keen eye,

It is not their strong denominator, as used in other places. They understood that the ball game in TN was different ,electoral wise.

■■■■■■■, ■■■■■■■■ ■■■■■■■■, ■■■■■■■ ■■■■■ ■■■■■■.

- these does not mean it's a cake walk for AIADMK, but yes they will be back in the saddle. BJP the projections made are not right and the expectations of twitteraaatti is too high - most are illusions ; difficult to accept but that's the truth.

All going well, I'll try and substantiate my thoughts , verbally, later. Regards
