Thread on trading stock options:

#1. The first few months of trading will rail tf out of you, prepare yourself for the worse, use money you can afford to lose, and don't get too attached to the money you're playing with in the markets. Don't fuck it up by putting your life savings and being depressed for losing

...all your money on options. you will lose more than you will win in the first phase of trading. Program your mind before you attach your emotions into trading. It will not end well.

#2. I'm not a financial advisor but it's always good to have longterm investments and dividend stocks on the side for your future. $AAPL $TSLA $VOO $SPY $KO $T $O are some of my favorites. It's also good to diversify between companies and sectors...

...if any of the stocks on your longterm investments are red on the day, it's best to add during those days. you're able to buy them for cheaper obviously. you don't wanna buy during Green Day's because that's kinda dumb...

#3. If you play any options trade, make sure to only put whatever money you can afford and allow that trade go to $0.00...this month on one trade I allowed myself to use $230,000 and $140,00 in two different trades and let them go to zero. Is that dumb asf to do? Yes, but...
