Twitter Thread by ■❤Anarcho-Femme■■

■❤Anarcho-Femme■■
@AnarchoThrash

I believe its important for all of those involved to be willing to do what is asked of us by the aggrieved party.

I also bear responsibility for this incident as the RV was mine, and I was the oldest person in that RV.

I take that duty to the young seriously, its my

> I have a confession to make to the community. This may be a long thread and I absolutely hope that it is read and processed and taken with the seriousness and consideration its contents demand.
>
> — \u672a\u306e\u5e7d\u970a (@Goatshade) December 6, 2020

Responsibility in all ways to protect those significantly younger than I am, regardless of their minor status or not. (This did not involve a minor in any way). So that will be something I have reflect on for a long time

I did not know the individual in question b4 that night.

But, I could feel their distress and wanted to know why, but... tbh, I wasn't sure if that person wanted me to keep asking them the same question.

I should have trusted my instincts, which told me to help this person, and see if they would talk to me. I legit, did not know the problem, which is obviously negligent in hindsight. I let my guard down, and in doing so, hurt the aggrieved.

I am truly, deeply, and personally sorry for my role. I am old enough to know better, and offer zero excuses.

I was wrong.

I only speak for me, not for the others.

I know that I am willing to answer to the aggrieved in any way they feel would help comfort them, and I know the comrade who I rt'd is too.

It sucks to have betrayed and let down someone so obviously special.

My hope is that they may heal in whatever way that needs to look like.

Losing a comrade due to our poor judgement is fucked.

I'm not just "sorry" however, rather I am trying to live my apologies by owning my complicity in their pain, and by holding what happened close to my Heart so that I may feel a part of the pain I caused.