1) 538 walks it back:

Right now, in fact, the polls are not showing a Democratic turnout advantage. Instead, based on a comparison of likely-voter and registered-voter polls, they're projecting roughly equal turnout between the parties,

2) with Republicans' demographic advantages (older, whiter voters typically vote at higher rates at the midterms) counteracting Democrats' seemingly higher enthusiasm."

3) Give little Natey a week and he'll see what we see: An R turnout advantage.
