Pleased to learn that a federal criminal grand jury's subpoena to Twitter to get my personal info was quashed by the judge, despite my association with sketchy accounts like @Popehat and @associatesmind, whom the court refused to do any favors.

CRIMINAL COMPLAINT

I, the complainant in this case, state that the following is true to the best of my knowledge and belief:

On or about December 15, 2016, in the Dallas Division of the Northern District of Texas and elsewhere, defendant John Rayne Rivello, with the intent to kill, injure, harass, and intimidate, did knowingly and intentionally use an interactive computer service and an electronic communication service to engage in a course of conduct that placed a person in reasonable fear of the death of and serious bodily injury to that person and caused, attempted to cause, and would be reasonably expected to cause substantial emotional distress to that person; in that Rivello posed as Twitter user Ari Goldstein and used his Twitter account @jew_goldstein to post an animated Graphics Interchange Format (GIF) on the victim's Twitter feed, knowing that the victim was an epileptic and knowing that the animated GIF was a strobe bearing the message "YOU DESERVE A SEIZURE FOR YOUR POSTS."

In violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2261A(2)(A) and (B), and 18 U.S.C. § 2261(b)(3).

This criminal complaint is based on the facts set out in the attached affidavit.

Because that last, single-emoji reply was by someone the FBI was investigating (in a matter completely unrelated to Rivello), the feds reacted by demanding Twitter hand over all its information on everyone in the thread (for the suspicious act of being replied to by randos).

Twitter, through @PerkinsCoieLLP partner John K. Roche, admirably fought this subpoena on behalf of its users, three times: before a USMJ, then a USDJ, then the MJ again. The result was this sealed 35-page opinion (now unsealed): <https://t.co/HKIPBXe10E>

The court rightly ruled that "Twitter has explained its clear interest in ferociously advocating for its users' First Amendment rights".

The government has shown a substantial relationship between its investigation of Justin Shafer and the information it seeks from Twitter regarding just one user: advertising and data-mining, and has suspended users whose tweets conflict with Twitter's corporate standards. But that argument misses the mark. The closeness requirement focuses on similarity of interests and whether the litigant asserting third-party standing "can reasonably be expected to properly frame the issues and present them with the necessary adversarial zeal." Munson, 467 U.S. at 956; see also In re Deepwater Horizon, 857 F.3d at 252-53 ("The whole purpose behind this 'close relation' factor is to ensure that the [appellant] will act as an effective advocate for the party whose interests it seeks to represent." (internal quotations and citation omitted)). And here, Twitter has explained its clear interest in ferociously advocating for its users' First Amendment rights. Twitter benefits most when its users have an accessible, unrestrained means of expression.

But the court only protected 2 of 3 anonymous speakers. @PogoWasRight had been in contact with @JShafer817 and blogging that his prosecution seemed to be vindictive, and these mere contacts were deemed sufficient to make her anonymity unworthy of 1A protection.

The government has shown a substantial relationship between its investigation of Justin Shafer and the information it seeks from Twitter regarding just one user: @PogoWasRight. At oral argument on Twitter's Motion to Quash Subpoena and Vacate Gag Order, the government presented evidence that @PogoWasRight frequently contacted Justin Shafer via his Twitter account @JShafer817, dating back to January of 2014. See Dkt. No. 20 at 10, lines 8-10. Special Agent ██████ testified that, in addition to several tweets where @JShafer817 mentions @PogoWasRight, there are multiple private, direct messages, between the two accounts. See id. at 19, lines 10-11. Special Agent ██████ also testified that on multiple occasions, Justin Shafer sought to ask his wife to reach out to @PogoWasRight to provide information regarding Shafer's case. See id. at 15, lines 23-25.

In light of these multiple confirmed and direct contacts, plus Shafer's interest in discussing his own case with @PogoWasRight, the government has made the requisite showing that identifying information for @PogoWasRight is substantially related to its investigation of Justin Shafer and his alleged crimes against Agent ██████. Accordingly, the Motion to Quash should be denied as to @PogoWasRight.

The weird bit is about the attempt to learn the identities of @popehat (unsecret alter ego of Ken White) and @associatesmind (whose screen name is Keith Lee with a blue check verifying that he is Keith Lee).

The feds farcically claimed Ken and Keith were not suspects, and the FBI were merely trying to get their contact information so they could ask for interviews. (They are both licensed attorneys whose up-to-date contact info is, by law, always publicly on file with their states.)

Although at various points of the government's brief and oral argument, the government alluded to its need to investigate Shafer's potential coconspirators, the government has suggested that it does not actually suspect @Popehat or @associatesmind of participating in Shafer's alleged crime. See Dkt. No. 20 at 25, lines 16-20. Of course, even if a user is excluded as a coconspirator, the information that user provides in an interview could nonetheless advance the government's investigation, suggesting new avenues of exploration while closing off others.

That's a pretty ridiculous excuse for demanding Twitter secretly hand over a list of all the IP addresses from which Ken or Keith had ever accessed Twitter, a list that would tend to provide a trail of where they had been at every moment they accessed Twitter from their phones.

Request:

Please provide subscriber and transactional information, from account creation date to present, for the following Twitter account(s):

@dawg8u
@abtnatural
@Popehat
@associatesmind
@PogoWasRight

From the account creation date until the present, provide the following records and information associated with the above-described Twitter accounts:

1. Names (including subscriber names, user names, and screen names);
2. Addresses (including mailing addresses, residential addresses, business addresses, and e-mail addresses);
3. Local and long distance telephone connection records;
4. Records of session times and durations, and the temporarily assigned network addresses (such as Internet Protocol ("IP") addresses) associated with those sessions;
5. Length of service (including start date) and types of service utilized;
6. Telephone or instrument numbers (including MAC addresses, Electronic Serial Numbers ("ESN"), Mobile Electronic Identity Numbers ("MEIN"), Mobile Equipment Identifier ("MEID"), Mobile Identification Numbers ("MIN"), Subscriber Identity Modules ("SIM"), Mobile Subscriber Integrated Services Digital Network Number ("MSISDN"), International Mobile Subscriber Identifiers ("IMSI"), or International Mobile Equipment Identities ("IMEI"));
7. Other subscriber numbers or identities, or associated accounts (including the registration Internet Protocol ("IP") address);
8. Means and source of payment for such service (including any credit card or bank account number) and billing records.

But the judge said this is fine, and "the undersigned cannot see how an IP address would reveal confidential communications". Sigh. Anyway, in conclusion ...

But the undersigned doubts what effect enforcing the Subpoena, specifically, will have on the users' First Amendment rights. As Twitter points out, the Twitter profiles for both @Popehat and @associatesmind are linked to blogs with identified creators lawyers Keith Lee and Ken White whose e-mail addresses, phone numbers, and photos are available on the their respective law firms' websites. But the availability of Lee and White's contact information detracts from Twitter's position that the Subpoena itself could chill these users' free speech. The breadth of the information that the government seeks hardly exceeds the information publicly available. Even without the Subpoena, the government can investigate @Popehat and @associatesmind to at least some degree. Whatever potential chilling effect the government's investigation will have is thus only slightly worsened by enforcing the Subpoena and requiring Twitter to provide information to confirm the users' identities.

But Twitter argues that the Subpoena does more than just confirm the user's identities. By gaining access to IP addresses, Twitter maintains, the government can gain access to other confidential or privileged information. Because the undersigned cannot see how an IP address would reveal confidential communications, this argument is unpersuasive and does not advance Twitter's First Amendment arguments.

Twitter's moderation/suspension decisions are often bad, but are not a 1st amendment issue. I appreciate that when the actual 1A shit hit the fan (i.e., actual gov't agents tried to expose our whole asses because a cop was insulted), Twitter threw down.
