Key takeaways... ■

1/ India will be the biggest beneficiary of the move to #remotework. Three factors driving this: the English-savvy population, willingness for companies out West to hire from a global talent pool, and the large STEM-educated workforce.

2/ India has the potential to become a media superpower. We have Bollywood, the massive audience, the content creators. They foresee India churning out media that isn't uniquely Indian, but one that resonates with global audiences.

3/ The government isn't doing foreign investors any favors with the stringent capital controls they've put in place. Additional capital gain taxes, overbearing KYC controls, and cumbersome paperwork are a few factors dissuading foreign capital from entering Indian markets.

4/ Where you choose to live, incorporate your company, and target your audience could be thought out and optimized for. They don't need to all be in the same region anymore. The world is flatter than ever before.

5/ Overall, India is trending in the right direction. The country is on a better trajectory than it was 10 years ago. The ever-growing consumer and producer class, coupled with the sophisticated investor ecosystem are driving things forward.

It's a good time to be long ■■■■■■ for sure!
