Twitter Thread by Thomas Wood ■

Thomas Wood ■
@twoodiac

It was a foregone conclusion that Trump would lose the TX case, but why did he say "This is the big one?" 1/9

We will be INTERVENING in the Texas (plus many other states) case. This is the big one. Our Country needs a victory!

— Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) December 9, 2020

Because the TX case rested on the proposition that a national election can be nullified and "overturned" (a term Trump actually used in a tweet) on the grounds that it does not satisfy conditions determined by the incumbent president 2/9 and the states governed by that president's political party--

(e..g., no votes by voters receiving mail-in ballots who do not request those ballots shall be deemed legitimate.) 3/9

This litigation was intended to nullify all the votes in all 50 states, and would have called for a new election. It challenged election procedures, not just election results. And it did not require any proof of fraud or undercounts or overcounts. 4/9

In other words, no national election can be legitimate that fails to reelect the incumbent president--in this case of course, Donald J. Trump, the Supreme Leader of the real America. 5/9

(Note that the litigation was entered after the election had been held and the GOP's incumbent president had lost, so the litigation wasn't even timely.)

This was an attempt to create a permanent authoritarian minority government. 6/9

In the 1930s, this sort of thing was called fascism in Europe. In today's world it is called "managed democracy" or "authoritarian state elections"---exactly as in Putin's Russia. 7/9 17 red states and 126 House Republicans signed on to it.

We are now faced with a treasonous war against majoritarian democracy, free elections, and the Constitutional rule of law in America by the Trumpian GOP. 8/9

As David Frum has predicted: "If conservatives become convinced that they can not win democratically, they will not abandon conservatism. They will reject democracy." 9/9