

Twitter Thread by Stand For Better

Stand For Better

@standforbetter

■■■Exclusive Info on Trump & Nukes■■■

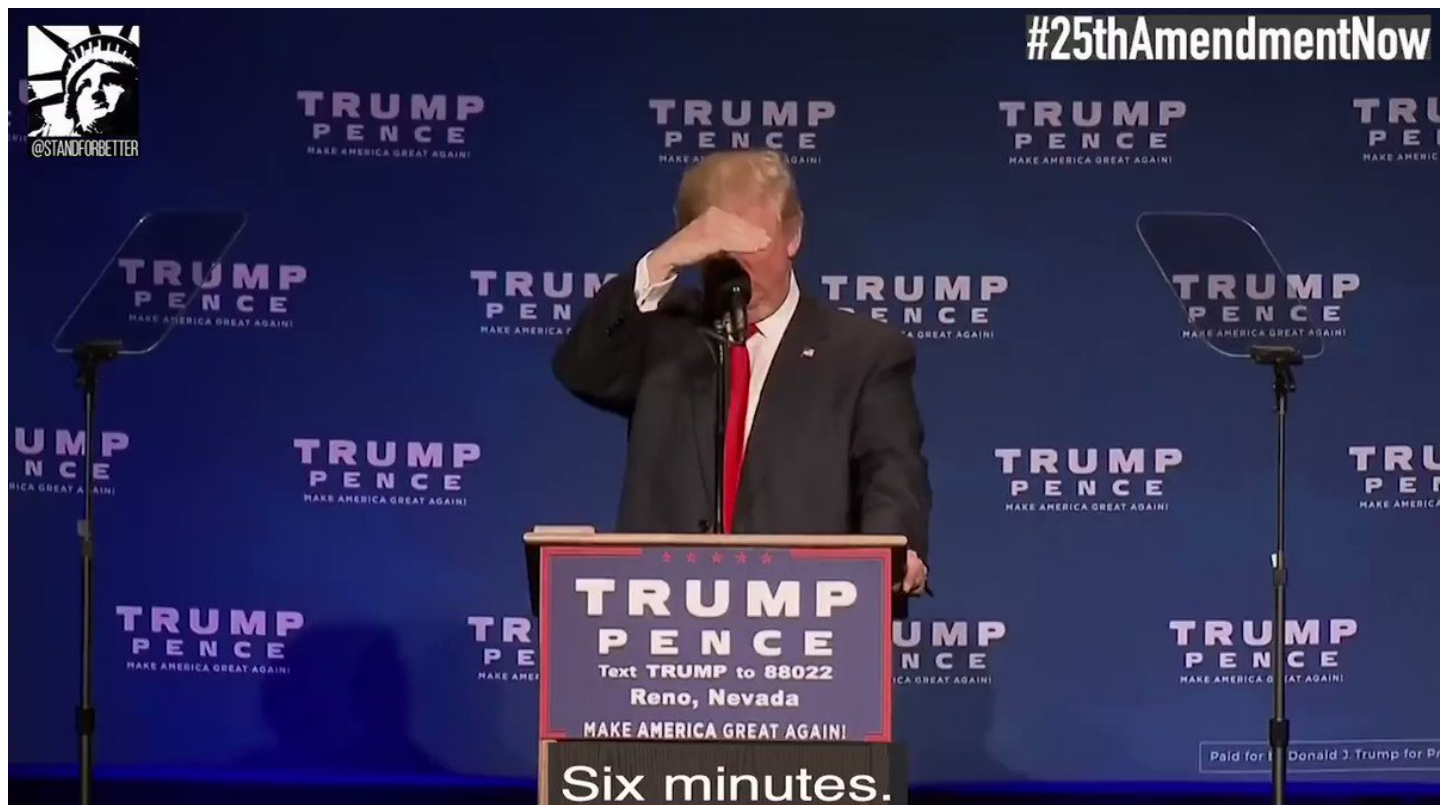

■Trump has UNCHECKED power to launch a nuclear missile.

■He commands it, exchanges codes with one person, and it's done

■READ THE ENTIRE THREAD. IMPORTANT INFORMATION

#25thAmendment

#25thAmendmentNow

This information was given to us on background. This source is a top expert on United States nuclear doctrine and is well known in Washington among elected officials and the military.

We did extensive research on this source and feel 100% confident in the information that was provided. This is not classified info, but it is not widely known or understood by the press or the public. It is discussed by officials in vague terms and is often misrepresented.

We feel it is important that the public know about this, especially in light of the 25th Amendment discussions. We have distilled the information as best we can from multiple conversations with this source.

President Trump can launch a nuclear strike at any time.

A launch order is considered legal if it comes from the President, his identity is confirmed, and it is part of a pre-approved target package FULL STOP. There are NO FURTHER REQUIREMENTS.

It is widely reported that the President needs the Secretary of Defense to concur with a launch order. THIS IS NOT THE CASE. The two-person rule DOES NOT apply to the President.

The Secretary of Defense and Joint Chiefs of staff play only an advisory role. They are not part of the nuclear chain of command.

All of the pre-planned attack options contained in the Presidential Emergency Satchel (Football) are pre-approved and considered legal to meet requirements under the Laws of Armed Conflict.

This process is done by STRATCOM and is reviewed by JAG to meet the legal requirements of this law. This pre-approval allows for immediate execution of an Emergency War Order by the president at ANY time.

President Trump can wake up in a bad mood, ask for the satchel and initiate an attack as long as

1. His identity is authenticated

<https://t.co/tW15FjjoZm> is an existing attack option in the OPLAN

We do not have to be at war for this to occur

No one can stop a launch order. Doing so would require mutiny in the chain of command. If this occurred another person could move into the position and continue the execution of the order.

Under the code of military justice, all members of the Military must obey LEGAL orders from commanders or face a court martial.

He cannot launch a nuclear weapon unless it is part of a pre-planned attack package. If he wants to attack a target that is not in the OPLAN, STRATCOM has to generate an attack plan and that plan must go through the legal approval process before it can be used.

Here's the whole Procedure:

Trump asks the officer carrying the football to open the briefcase. Trump chooses from a list of major, limited, or select attack options.

This selection is communicated with the officer on watch at the National Military Command Center

Trump reads personal authentication code that he carries with him in a sealed container to the officer who responds with his own authentication code. This process confirms the order is coming from the President.

The order is passed straight to STRATCOM or to forces in the field as an Emergency Action Message

Ground based Minutemen ICBM's are launched within a few minutes of receipt of the EAM. Other weapon systems take different amounts of time.

A launch cannot be recalled

Further thoughts from the source

Current proclamations by folks like Colin Powell are personal opinion in their view.

The common story from Schlesinger that Nixon was removed from the nuclear command chain during his last few days of his presidency were factually not true.