

Twitter Thread by WORKSHOP

WORKSHOP

@zineworkshop

A super dieend quick de-reading of Naomi Klein's (?) book entitled Lo Nogo in n episodes. First things first. "It was twenty years ago tonight". We, me and us never read it. Why? Because there is a premise in there as we and I know it - knew it beforehand. No incorporation

"rules". Conditions rule. And one can change these not as rules but as structural dynamics so to say. A "no logo please!" is behind Klein's theories. Give us a general commodity without being commodity it says. Let's be clean it says. Anticorp is dead now. It's ever been dead.

It was dead from the beginning. When culture surrenders it's been declared the core of the conditions. Clearly Klein follows a dictum reproducing it. The dictum of a loss in the civic space - whatever this is. Is it where there is no war, no wage work? Is it freedom, leisure, free time? Capitalism is in-corporated in the hype of No Logo, no logo/lo nogo tells "capitalism=corporation". Such a news. In fact No Logo describes a wish to be without the evil of brands aka incorporation(s). But marketing comes late as it is only the surface of competition.

Simply 20 years after the lo nogo hype it becomes clearer that there is no no-things production. Klein's attack attacked trade but did not attack property or its "core": production and value. Selling images to the masses seems to be close to the "integrated spectacle" one knows from situationists and this "no" comes up with a sort of rejection, a black in black refusing false content, content based on the sameness of difference. And end to the lies of the story telling ware, a tacit. The brand the image, the image-based capitalism. Wasn't it

Walter Benjamin teaching that conditions could only be understood and realized by the surfaces? With lo nogo its the culture again as the battle ground of the world we are living in. The phenomena. Hm, I and we see Klein knows less about categories like surplus and reproduction. She stuck in the consumerism. She sees Pepsi only where there is ("is" in terms of Verhältnisse) value realized, wealth expropriated, work force exploited.

to be continued

@threadreaderapp unroll